Forecast 2012

Most readers of this newsletter are homeowners and have worked for, on or in a business that was in a commercial zone. Since the construction industry has changed so much over the last few years, at RVM, we thought that you might appreciate an update on the construction forecast for 2012. All statistics and key insights are verified by leading industry think tanks like McGraw-Hill and the Dodge Construction Outlook.

- Single family housing in 2012 will improve 10% in dollars, corresponding to a 7% increase in the number of units to 435,000. This is still a low amount, as the excess supply of homes due to foreclosures continues to depress the market.
- Multifamily housing will rise 18% in dollars and 17% in units, continuing its moderate, upward trend.

- Commercial building will grow 8%. Warehouses and hotels will see the largest percentage increases, but improvement for offices and stores will be modest.
- The institutional building market will slip an additional 2% in 2012, after falling 15% in 2011. The tough fiscal environment for states and localities will continue to dampen school construction, and the uncertain economic environment will limit growth in healthcare facilities.
- Manufacturing buildings will increase 4%, following the 35% gain in 2011, as the low value of the U.S. dollar continues to support export growth.

Call RVM today for all your construction questions. With the industry still recovering and finance rates at all-time lows, it's a great time to get the best deal for your construction dollars.
