I think we can all remember the feeling we had when we bought the homes we live in. Pride, satisfaction, excitement and no doubt a little fear around the mortgage. One of the reasons that we chose our homes is the way it made us feel when we drove up for the first time. That's called curb appeal, unfortunately it doesn't last forever, and like kitchens and bathrooms, it needs updating from time to time. Has your home lost its luster? Do you still feel that sense of pride and satisfaction when you pull into your driveway? If not, consider an exterior facelift. Exterior remodels add value to your home, make your home sell faster if you are in the market, and can cause you to be proud and happy to come home every day. RVM has been helping homeowners reimagine the exteriors of their homes for 35 years, we would love to meet with you for a complimentary brain storming appointment. Before embarking on an exterior remodel consider these steps:

- Do some research, Houzz.com is a great place to start.
- Look for before pictures that bear a resemblance to your own home
- Create a wish list of what you have always wanted
- Now be realistic and decide on a budget
- Use your budget and wish list to decide on

- what is really important to you and what isn't
- If you don't have artistic leanings, don't worry, we can help, we have staff designers
